

Trust Connection

Building Lasting Relationships for the Benefit of our Mutual Clients

TRUST NEWS AND INFORMATION FROM YOUR TRUST REPRESENTATIVE OFFICE

Welcome to Trust Connection, a regular communication from Valley National Trust Services.

January 2020

Fiduciary Income Tax Basics

Income tax plays a critical role in day-to-day investing, yet the concepts often get disorganized for many. What are the key issues that drive fiduciary income taxation, and how can we best represent and communicate those concepts to the client for optimal results? First, we need to go back to some of the basics.

What Is Fiduciary Income Tax?

Fiduciary income tax returns report the income of estates and trusts. A fiduciary is an individual who manages a deceased person's estate and/or trust. They must also settle any tax liabilities before transferring the trust or estate to the legal heirs. Fiduciaries must pay any tax earnings after the grantor's death including interest on investments and deferred salary. Tax officials treat the income as if the deceased obtained the income while still alive. Fiduciary income tax must be filed using Form 1041 for both trusts and estates.

Trusts & Estates as Taxpayers

When someone dies, an estate is created. A representative (fiduciary) oversees the estate during the settlement of all legal affairs of the deceased. The transition of the estate ends upon the distribution of the estate to the legal heirs of the deceased. A trust, on the other hand, is a legal arrangement where the grantor transfers legal ownership of an asset to the trustee who then passes it on to the beneficiary. The trust document contains all the terms of the grantor. Estate and trust representatives are responsible for reporting fiduciary income to the government.

The fiduciary of a domestic deceased's estate or trust, files Form 1041 to report:

- The income, deductions, gains, losses, etc. of the estate or trust
- The income that is either accumulated or held for future distribution or distributed currently to the beneficiaries
- Any income tax liability of the estate or trust

- Employment taxes on wages paid to household employees

Determining taxable income, for both trusts and estates, bears slight differences compared to an individual's personal taxes. The trust gets a deduction for the portion of the estate transferred to heirs. Anything remaining becomes taxable income for the trust or estate. The trust/estate pays tax on the taxable income applicable to the estate/trust while the legal heirs pay tax on the assets they receive. As compared to an individual taxpayer, trusts and estates receive significantly lower personal exemptions.

Taxes on Irrevocable Trusts

In an irrevocable trust, a tax return will be submitted on behalf of that trust as a separate entity. The trustee makes sure that the tax return is filed and will report estate taxes using Form 1041 for estates and trusts. On this form, your client will disclose any interest income, deductions, gains, and losses for the trust. They will also report any distributions on this form.

Your client will only need to complete and submit Form 1041 if the estate generates more than $600 in gross income for the tax year. When money is distributed to beneficiaries, those distributions will need to be deducted and reported using the K-1 form (breaks down the distribution, or how much of the distributed money came from principal versus interest. The K-1 is the form that lets the beneficiary know his/her tax liability from trust distributions). If necessary, an individual can file an extension as they would on an individual tax return.

Taxes on Revocable Trusts

Unlike irrevocable trusts, revocable trusts can be changed, giving the client the option to add or revoke the trust at any time. For revocable trusts, they are expected to pay taxes on the income they earn in the principal while they are still alive. However, when deceased, like an irrevocable trust, the revocable trust now becomes a separate entity. If in the final year, the trust earned income, the trustee will file that with their personal individual tax return for that year and pay taxes as the estate for the years to come. When distributions are made, those are claimed as deductions on the estate's tax return, just like an irrevocable trust.

How to Determine Whether the Entity or Beneficiary Pays the Tax

In the 1041 tax return form, the entity reports and pays its income taxes. However, it is also a return where an entity may deduct certain items from taxable income because that income is being reported on the tax return of the beneficiaries of the estate or trust. As a result, beneficiaries of a trust typically pay taxes on the distributions they receive from the trust's income, rather than the trust itself paying the tax.

Communication with Beneficiaries

Every trust and estate, while similar, has a different nature. It is essential to stay up to date and communicate with the beneficiaries to make clear any misunderstandings regarding the complex nature of fiduciary income tax.

This publication contains general information only, and National Advisors Trust Company is not, by this publication, rendering accounting, financial, investment, legal, tax or other professional advice or services.

Valley National Trust Services invites you to learn more:

Valley National Financial Advisors is an independent one-stop financial services group offering personal, comprehensive and coordinated financial services.

Contact us for more information on business succession or trust services.
CONTACT US: 610-868-9000

About Trust Connection

As a Trust Representative Office of National Advisors Trust, we represent the largest federally-chartered trust company created by Registered Investment Advisors (RIAs). Our trust service model is built on the strength of the local support and responsiveness provided by you—the local estate planning professional, Valley National Advisers—the local and trusted investment advisor and National Advisors Trust serving as the trust administrator. This combined expertise allows us to excel in the services we provide delivering the best possible outcomes for our mutual clients.

